

ANIMAL HEALTH CENTRE

DECEMBER 2010

We have been in our lovely little Centre for only seven months. During that time owners and their pets have found much to celebrate in the improved health of their pets through the real food we offer and caring naturopathic treatment. It has been immensely rewarding to be able to offer these services and literally watch pets improve before our eyes. On a few occasions a pet has passed away and we feel for those left behind. Again though, the food and care has vastly improved the quality of the passing and owners have been overjoyed to experience this as a parting gift to their beloved animals. As Christmas and the New Year draw near, we all face the challenges of 2011 with renewed determination and the hope of a healthier planet for all living creatures and their caretakers.

A Christmas thought : If non animal lovers abuse you, shrug it off and stun them with genuine good wishes. They will feel worse, and you will feel better. It's win-win!

Blessings and good will to you all.
Sarndra and Debbie

INTERSPECIES LOVE

Almost all aspects of life seem to involve our experiences in relationships, which are as varied as the people in them: sometimes joyful and funny, other times sad and melancholy. Relationships go beyond skin-deep, along with genes they shape how we see the world. Early attachments made in youth teach us who and how to be. Bonding is not limited to people; who we love extends beyond species lines.

Take Owen, the young hippopotamus orphaned by the giant tsunami in Kenya, who was taken in by Mzee, the ancient tortoise. The crow nursed back to life by ethologist Konrad Lorenz, who then fell in love with a Swiss woman from a nearby village, ignoring all other bird companions. Then there was the kitten adopted by Koko the gorrilla, and more recently a couple filmed a neighbourhood crow caring for a young stray cat, diligently and lovingly the bird brought food, even worms to nourish the fragile feline and over time the two began to play together enjoying each others company.

Interspecies love suggests that maybe it's time for humans to adopt some important animal ways of compassion and care.
